

AIDS & ABORIGINAL PEOPLE

Here Are the Facts!

The HIV/AIDS pandemic continues to grow and threaten Aboriginal Peoples throughout the world. The last decade has seen a steady rise in Aboriginal AIDS cases in Canada. Experts speculate that as many as twenty percent of nearly 17,000 AIDS cases in this country could be Aboriginal.

Infection rates in Aboriginal women and 2-spirited (gay) people are rising rapidly. Injection drug users, inmates, and street involved persons are increasingly at risk.

Aboriginal AIDS cases are younger than non-Aboriginal AIDS cases. 28.6% of all newly documented cases among First Nations Peoples are under 30 years old, with almost one in four cases being female (compared to one in thirteen among non-Aboriginal persons). In some cases, people are being infected at ages 19 and 20.

Why Are Aboriginal People Susceptible To HIV/AIDS?

No one is immune from AIDS. The economic and social power imbalance between Aboriginal people and non-Aboriginal people in this country plagues our communities with a host of social problems. HIV is rapidly becoming one of them. Studies in mainstream society also show that instances of HIV infection occur more frequently where poverty, violence, drug abuse and alcoholism are present.

The high degree of movement of Aboriginal people between inner cities and rural on-reserve areas may bring the risk of HIV infection to even the most remote First Nations reserves. Some reserves may be governed by leadership that are unsympathetic to AIDS and HIV. Cases where HIV infected 2-spirited men have been unable to return to their reserve for holistic treatment have been reported.

Disproportionate inmate populations with higher at-risk factors can unwittingly contribute to new infections both during incarceration and after release.

In some rural and northern areas, HIV/AIDS culturally specific counseling and outreach services are practically nonexistent.

What Can Be Done to Help?

More education and better information among Aboriginal people in Canada is needed to guide prevention and control strategies.

More on-reserve, northern Inuit, and Métis programming and treatment must occur. The barriers between leadership and rival political groups must be broken down, and issues of homophobia must be addressed on-reserve, northern and remote rural communities.

More Aboriginal programming and education in prisons and institutions must be provided. Communities must take an active role in the education of their children and members about the dangers of unprotected sex and other risk associated behaviours.

Governments and other agencies must respond to HIV/AIDS in all Aboriginal communities by ensuring that resources and services are culturally appropriate with access to counseling and HIV testing.
