

discrimination

If it doesn't raise your blood pressure, get a checkup

Every patient has the right to the best available health care, regardless of health condition, race, age, sexual orientation or socioeconomic status.

Discrimination is a problem that affects all society. Within the health services, people with HIV and other diseases are sometimes affected by discrimination. Check for these symptoms of discrimination:

- Refusal to admit patients to health care facility
- Delayed treatment
- Other forms of care (e.g., food, hygiene) delayed or withheld
- Premature discharge of patients
- Testing without consent
- Breach of confidentiality within or outside the health care system
- Inappropriate comments or behavior (e.g., shouting, rudeness)
- Use of excessive precautions

Health workers: partners in the fight against discrimination

Pan American Health Organization

Regional Office of the World Health Organization